

Task 2:

Page I: I chose this page because it is literally and graphically a summary of the book. The table of content is established within a drawing of a facade. Additionally, just like throughout the entire book, the ground plan of the building drawn above, is located on the bottom.

Page XIII: This particular page seems interesting to me, because it shows the ideal architecture of an observation tower, to execute the, at that time rediscovered, science of astrology.

Pages CCVII- CCVIII: The last selected pages all picture different blueprints for an organ, a highly popular instrument at that time. Nevertheless, it seems strange, that the construction of an organ has the most versions in total of all the examined structures.
